The social science major is a self-designed degree program that integrates course work in three of seven disciplines: anthropology, criminal justice, economics, history, political science, psychology and sociology. The program prepares students for positions in human service organizations as well as for graduate work in social science disciplines, law or business.

Social science majors at Pitt-Bradford design their own program based upon personal interests and career goals. The flexibility of the program is especially attractive to working adults because it allows students the opportunity to successfully balance work and academics. Students have the opportunity to receive hands-on experience by taking part in an internship and/or directed research project.
