NURSING STUDENTS LEARN FROM COMPUTERIZED MANNEQUINS

Ten Pitt-Bradford nursing students stare with apprehension at a chalk-white baby doll lying in its bassinet in their lab.

Their nervousness is justified – this doll is going to give them a test and a half. SimBaby is no ordinary doll. The lifesize mannequin can also react like a real baby – one that eats, drinks, eliminates waste, needs an IV, runs a fever, has a racing heart or choked-off airway. It can even die.

That would be what's making the students nervous. More details.

STUDENTS HELP CHILDREN PREPARE FOR COMPETITION

Pitt-Bradford writing students are helping area elementary school students prepare for a regional reading competition April 2 at Floyd C. Fretz Middle School.

The students are members of Dr. Nancy McCabe's Writing for Children class. McCabe, associate professor of writing, is the director of the Pitt-Bradford writing program. More details.
